Marco Polo's View of that Far Off Land—Some Marvelous Stories.

Lindon Globe.

Lindon Globe.

In Marco Polo's travels the first mention of Burmah in the mediaval language of Europe is to be found. He calls the kingdom Mien, in Chiness fashion; and after narrating his approach to it by a down-nill journey of two and a half days, and a much longer passage through a wild country, he pauses to tell of a great battle which had taken place between the forces of the "Great Kaan" of Tartary and the King of Mien, which he describes so little, and was so weak and fanished that I of the "Great Kaan" of Tartary and the King of Mien, which he describes so graphically that it seems probable he gathered his account from the lips of those who had been present at it. An army of the "Great Kaan" had approached the frontier of Burnah, and the Burnesse King advanced against it with 60,000 men and 2,000 elephants, having on their backs towers of timber, each of which contained from twelve to sixteen warriors. The Tartar force was the weaker, and the Partar horses were coared by the elephants, and broke in disorder. Then Nescradin, the Tartar captain, ordered his men to the their horses to trees and to take their hows, in the use of which they were very expert. The ele-Nescradin, the Tartar captain, ordered is men to the their horses to trees and to take their horses to delice their horses to delice their their horses to delice their their Ludovico di Varthema, most naive and entertaining of travelers, visited Burmah toward the close of the filteenth century, but he has not buched upon by others who followed him there. He speaks, among other things, of the long and thick timber, of the plentifiques of civet cats, and of the marvelous jewelry of the King, the rings of gold and gems about his arms and legs, the rings upon his fingers, and his ears that "hung down half a palm" with the weight of their adornment. During the next century a good many Europeans seem to have strayed into this remote land. Burmah changed its divisions frequently at this time, First one king and the another rose to profinence and detaroyed or made tributtry his fellow kings. In the consequent series of wars European partisans were engaged, notably a good many Portuguese. About the middle of the century there srose a great King, known to fame as Brams of Thungo, and many fiftence. Brama is spoken of as exceeding the "Great Turk" in power, and to have improve the appetite, strengthen the provided what he saw there. He admired the straight streets of the capital, so protected by rows of palm trees that you might walk in the shade alf day. He was struck, as most people were, by the honors paid to the scarce dephants, which extended even to washing their feet in silver basines, and he mentions how wild et phants were captured by aneinting depoys with a preculiar scented ointment. When a white elephant was earght, each personal to the scarce dephants of war the King had no fewer than 5,000. In the country were make a donation of half a dusas.

The world is full of misanthropic people who have become embittered as the result of misaken tideas. They crowded life with certain-theories, they based their entire act on upon them and discovered too late that they were wrong. All of which proves the absolute importance of shaping life upon a proper basis.

But the principle can be carried to all the details of life. For years the entire world believed in the theory that rheumatinn was a slight muscular disorder which world believed in the theory that rheuma-tism was a slight muscular disorder which could be removed by a liberal rubbing with liniments. Surting upon this mis-taken idea thousands of unhappy sufferers have endured intense agony when they might have been relieved and permanent-ly cured because they have used the wrong prescription. Rheumatism is a blood disease, and there is only one way in which it can be successfully treated. That is by going directly to the seat of the disease—which is the blood. A very striking illustration of the truth of this theory is found in the following state-ment: To the Editor-SIR:

Constantia, N. Y., August 26, 1885.—
Two years ago this next October my baby was born, and while convalencing I was taken suddenly with what my physician said was chill fever, accompanied by the most terrific pain in the head, depriving me of sleep and rest and driving me almost crazy.

me of sleep and rest and activity.

A short time after this I was attacked with a severe noze-bleed, which relieved the pain in my head. The fever with which I was barning up continued, however, and rheamatism developed in my hip, knees and feet, the latter soon awelling so badly that they would pit on pressure, the pain in my joints being sluply unendurable, at discessitating the use of large doses of anodynes. The doctor said he could do nothing more for me—that I would not live a week, and at this time, though I knew nothing of it myself, all my people and the neighbors were expecting my death at any time.

My sister, who was taking care of me, persuaded me to take some of Warner's safe cure. She gave it to me in taspoon-ul doses, which quieted my stomach, and which I followed up until about one-half of the bottle had been taken. My sister then sent and got a bottle of Warner's safe Rheumatic Cure, believing that to be the special remedy my case re
